

Can you put a price on the reliability of your disaster recovery solution?

The expansion of Egton's successful Data Validation Service (DVS) means that more and more businesses across the UK can now take advantage of regular validations and the peace of mind this brings.

In the unfortunate event that your server is stolen, damaged through fire or flood, or suffers irreparable hardware failure - it is essential that your back up media can be read and that the hosted data can be reconstructed.

Up to 10 per cent of all back ups are unusable

One-in-ten standard software back ups prove to be faulty or unreadable when called upon for emergency data recovery.

DVS will regularly check and highlight whether your back up solution is working properly - helping to ensure data integrity and business continuity.

What is DVS?

Modern organisations rely heavily on the data held within their business. Egton's DVS verifies that your back up media can restore this critical data.

Wrongly configured scripts or faulty hardware could report that back ups have been successful, leaving you in the dark of any potential problems. The best way to check that your data is intact and fully retrievable is to have your back up tapes validated regularly.

A team of IT experts will thoroughly test your back up media to ensure that all your data can be regenerated in the event of server damage, theft or hardware failure.

Who are Egton?

In 2006, Egton processed 16,000 back up tapes for primary health care, MOD, education and dental organisations. Egton holds the International Standard ISO/IEC 27001:2005 for information security management. This is awarded by the BSI group and covers the confidentiality, integrity and availability of information within both our software and business. Our commitment to information security provides you assurance that your data is safe with Egton.
